PAIRINGS

Different tempering for different couvertures

Our couvertures may contain fats other than cocoa butter, such as fat from milk or nuts, as is the case in Almond Inspiration.

These fats modify the crystallization of cocoa butter, as they have lower melting ranges.

Stable cocoa butter crystals form at a lower temperature, so the tempering process is different.

These are manual tempering temperatures. For advice on tempering using professional machines, get in touch with the technical assistance at L'École Valrhona.

OPTIMAL STORAGE

Always store bags of feves away from light and humidity in opaque, well-sealed packaging. The ideal temperature varies slightly according to ingredient: 61/64°F (16/18°C) for matcha and almond, and 64/68°F (18/20°C) for Fruit Inspiration products. Be sure to reseal opened bags to preserve the freshness and quality of the products.

FOR VIBRANT COLOR AND PERFECT TEXTURE

When molding, make your products as close as possible to the retail date to guarantee vibrant color and perfect texture. For Fruit Inspiration products, stir continuously when melting to achieve a smooth texture, and carefully follow the tempering chart indicated for each product to ensure that your creations shine and hold their shape.

OPTIMUM SHELF LIFE
